J. R. Tretera, Z. Horák: Konfesní právo [Religion Law] A Summary

The monograph discusses religion law, an area of secular law that concerns the areas in which the guarantee of individual and collective religious freedom applies.

The subject matter of this monograph is primarily Czech religion law, and the authors have strived, to the extent possible, to encompass all its areas. The monograph also provides elementary information on the religion law of other European countries and the United States of America.

The main aim of the monograph is to provide information about Czech religion law to the professional public and students – current as of 10th December 2015.

The monograph follows the tradition of the study of religion law as an area of law that gradually split from church law in the Czech Lands in the 19th century. The teaching of this area of law at the School of Law of the Charles University in Prague was restored in 1990 after a 40-year interruption inflicted by the Communist regime. Religion law was first taught as a component of “Church Law”, and began to be taught as a separate area of law in 1997. The teaching of these areas of law was re-established at all Czech law faculties and at most theological faculties.

After the revolution in 1989 the Czech expertise in religion law was built anew, notwithstanding the pre-1948 inspiration for religion law from the Czechoslovak democratic tradition and its connection to the international treaties on human rights, beginning with ideas from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 10th December 1948.

As for religion law outside the Czech Republic, the authors were immersed in many monographs, yearbooks and comparative studies published in the Czech Republic as well as abroad in the last two decades, especially the works published by international scientific organisations – most importantly the European Consortium for Church and State Research.

The authors present the result of their two-decade research and pedagogical activities at the Law School of the Charles University in Prague to the public.

The first part of the monograph is dedicated to the basic terminology of religion law in its global scope. The second and third parts discuss Czech religion law and form the core of the monograph. According to the customary system of legal dogmatic, these two parts are divided into general and special parts. In both parts the authors analyse the impact of international religion law on Czech law.

The fourth part provides an overview of foreign systems of religion law, especially in the countries that are geographically and culturally close to the Czech Republic. Understandably, this explanation cannot be as detailed as it is for recent and current Czech law.

The fifth part comprises a historical overview of Czech religion law from the beginnings of Czech statehood in the 9th century up to the present.

The text distinguishes between a fundamental explanation, printed in regular font, and an additional explanation, printed in smaller font. The additional explanation includes examples, explanatory notes, quotations from some longer legal norms, international and intrastate treaties and authors' commentaries.

The monograph reflects the rich literature concerning religion law that has been published in the Czech Lands in the last twenty years; the monograph refers to this literature and also to foreign literature.
